Workers’ Compensation Benefits for Full-Time Employees

A full-time worker who is injured on the job may be entitled to compensation benefits. These benefits may include medical care, payment of wages, and vocational rehabilitation. To determine if you are eligible, you must report the injury to your employer as soon as possible. Your employer will then file a claim with the New York State Workers’ Compensation Board (NYSIF).

If you are injured on the job, you should seek medical care immediately. Your employer will provide you with a list of approved medical providers. You may also seek medical care from a provider of your choice, but in that case, you will be required to pay for the cost of the treatment.

You may be entitled to workers’ compensation benefits if you are injured on the job and meet certain eligibility criteria. These criteria include:

- The injury was job-related.
- The injury was caused by a workplace accident.
- The injury occurred during the course of employment.

To claim workers’ compensation benefits, you must file a claim with NYSIF. This can be done online, by phone, or by mail. You will need to provide information about your injury, including the date and time it occurred, the location, and the circumstances.

Once your claim is filed, NYSIF will review your case to determine if you are eligible for benefits. If your claim is approved, you will be sent a letter explaining the benefits to which you are entitled.

You may be entitled to receive medical benefits, wage benefits, and rehabilitation benefits. Medical benefits may cover the cost of medical treatment related to your injury. Wage benefits may cover a portion of your lost wages while you are unable to work due to your injury. Rehabilitation benefits may help you return to work or obtain new employment.

Employee Benefits

In addition to workers’ compensation benefits, employees may be entitled to other benefits such as health insurance, retirement benefits, and unemployment compensation. If you have questions about these benefits, contact your employer or the appropriate government agency.

If you are injured on the job, it is important to understand your rights and responsibilities. You should seek medical care immediately and report your injury to your employer. NYSIF will then begin the process of determining if you are entitled to workers’ compensation benefits.
